43 I Introduction

45 Invited to answer the question, “Teacher, which commandment in the law is the greatest?” Jesus
46 answered, “‘You shall love the Lord your God with all your heart, and with all your soul, and 47 with all your mind.’ This is the great and first commandment. And a second is like it, ‘You shall 48 love your neighbor as yourself.’ On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets.”
49 (Matthew 22:36–40). Christians respond to these commands in the confident hope that by God’s 50 grace alone we are set free to worship God and love our neighbor.

52 This social statement addresses the question: how do we understand human sexuality within the 53 context of Jesus’ invitation to love God and love our neighbor (Romans 13:9–10; Galatians

56

57 II A distinctly Lutheran approach

58

59 Our first response to this question is to remember that, as Lutherans, we are the inheritors of a 60 rich theological tradition that assists us in discerning how to live faithfully in a complex world.
61 Our starting point is the foundational Lutheran understanding that we read and understand the 62 Bible in light of the incarnation, death, and resurrection of Jesus Christ. This “good news” of the 63 Gospel that we are freed from captivity to sin (justification by grace through faith on account of 64 Christ) allows us to respond to God’s mercy through love for and service to the neighbor¹ (our 65 vocation in the world).

67 As Lutherans, understanding that God’s promised future is the transformation of the whole
68 creation, we believe that the Triune God, Father, Son and Holy Spirit, is engaged deeply and 69 relationally in the continuing creation of the world. We anticipate and live out the values of this 70 promised future concretely in the present. It is therefore in the midst of daily life in the world that 71 we are given the vocational task of serving the neighbor.

73 Central to our vocation, in relation to human sexuality, is the building and protection of trust² in 74 relationships. As justified and forgiven sinners, our efforts to create trust are in response to God’s

In The Responsible Self (1963), H. Richard Niebuhr set Christian ethical reflection on a new course by

75 faithful (trustworthy) relationship of love for the world in Christ. We are called therefore to be 76 trustworthy in our human sexuality and to build social institutions and practices where trust and 77 trustworthy relationships can thrive.

79 Justified by grace through faith

80 As Lutherans, we believe that we are justified by grace through faith. The Lutheran Confessions 81 guide us in our understanding of justification by identifying three intersecting affirmations: solus
82 Christus, sola gratia and sola fide. (Christ alone, grace alone, and by faith alone).³ Deeply
83 grounded in Scripture understood as the living Word of God, these together proclaim Jesus Christ
84 as central to the Gospel:

- 85 • Solus Christus (Christ alone) insists that the purpose of Scripture is to reveal Jesus Christ as 86 the Savior of the world. Scripture is to be interpreted through the lens of Christ's death and 87 resurrection for the salvation of all.
- 88 • Sola gratia (grace alone) affirms that we are saved by grace alone. As with solus Christus, 89 sola gratia means that there is nothing a person can do through his or her action that will 90 create a right relationship with God. Only God's grace can do that.
- 91 • Sola fide (by faith alone) affirms that, through the hearing of God's Word, the Holy Spirit
92 ignites faith (trust) in God within us.

94 These three emphases also tell us that sin does not have to do simply with the keeping or breaking
95 of rules or laws. Rather, we sin when we turn away from God and look to ourselves. Sin turns us 96 toward obsessive self-concern, with disastrous consequences for ourselves and others.

98 We live therefore within the paradox that in our sexuality, as in other aspects of life, we always 99 encounter both our own sinfulness and God's grace. It is only through Christ that we can turn in 100 faith to trust God, which leads immediately to our baptismal vocation to love and serve the

treating trust as the center of Christian thinking based on the question of trust or distrust of God as the fundamental option in human existence. In terms of human relationships, he wrote, "Faith as trust or distrust accompanies all our encounters with others and qualifies all our responses" (118). Philosophers and theorists such as Hannah Arendt (The Human Condition, 1958), and Michael Polanyi (Personal Knowledge, 1958) have advanced reflection on the centrality of promise and networks of trusting reliance in human affairs and knowledge. Some social scientists have begun to identify social trust as an indispensable feature of healthy organizations, institutions, and whole societies, and social distrust as one of the destructive forces at work in the breakdown and dissolution of organized social arrangements. Such reflections operate in the background of this statement.

³ Each "sola" points to the same saving event. That is, they together proclaim Jesus Christ as central to the Gospel, each perceived from a different dimension. Other dimensions of God's saving work, other "solas," also have been associated with Lutheranism. Especially in the nineteenth century, Lutherans began to emphasize sola Scriptura, although the Confessions rarely used that phrase. Luther more often spoke of the Word of God alone (solus Verbo), by which he meant fundamentally the oral proclamation of the Gospel. For a key source suggesting the solas listed here, see Apology of the Augsburg Confession, IV. 120 in: The Book of Concord: The Confessions of the Evangelical Lutheran Church, eds. Robert Kolb and Timothy J. Wengert (Minneapolis: Fortress Press, 2000).

105 Christian freedom in service of the neighbor

106 Lutherans are not reluctant to live confidently within the difficult, complex, and ambiguous
107 realities of daily life. Lutherans understand that active engagement in the world is integral to 108 Christian identity. They are able to remain secure in Christ in the midst of the confusions, lack of 109 clarity, and struggle that God's calling entails. "Did we in our own strength confide," sang
110 Luther, "our striving would be losing." In Christ, "God is making his appeal through us" (2 111 Corinthians 5:20; 1 Peter 4:11). Lutheran theology prepares us precisely to hold in creative 112 tension the paradoxes and complexities of the human situation. This is also the case with regard 113 to human sexuality. God has created human beings as part of the whole creation and with the 114 intention that we live actively in the world (Romans 12–13; Ephesians 5–6).

116 In his letter to the Galatians, Paul testifies that the foundation of Christian identity is what God
117 has done for us through Christ (Galatians 2:20; 3:24–28). Luther echoes this affirmation in his 118 treatise, "The Freedom of the Christian," claiming that Christians are at one and the same time
119 radically freed by the Gospel and called to serve the good of the neighbor:

120 A Christian is a perfectly free lord of all, subject to none.

123 Luther believed that these two affirmations were the key to understanding the entirety of 124 Christian life in the world. Following Paul, he understood freedom to be the basis for Christian 125 life and ethics.⁵ Luther believed that this understanding of Christian freedom flowed from the 126 doctrine of justification as that which "preserves and guides all churchly teaching and establishes 127 our consciences before God."⁶

128

129 In other words, because we are radically freed in Christ, we are called in that freedom to love and 130 serve our neighbor as Christ loved and served us (Galatians 5:1; 5:13). Only in the freedom from 131 preoccupation with the self and the burden of unworthiness before the perfection of God's law 132 can such concern for the neighbor become possible.

134 The Lutheran theological understanding of God's salvation and our utter dependence on God's 135 grace, grounded as it is in Scripture (Romans 3:21–26; Ephesians 2:8–10), has crucial
136 implications for Christian ethics and discernment:

137 • In emphasizing that salvation is not a reward for morally approved behavior, Lutheran

⁶ This citation is taken from Martin Luther's preface to the published doctoral thesis on justification for Peter Palladius, who defended them before Wittenberg's theological faculty on June 1, 1537 (Luther's Works: Kritische Gesamtausgabe/ [Schriften/], 65 vols. Weimar: H. Böhlau, 1883-1993. Hereafter identified by "WA") 39 I, 205, 2–5) For the Lutheran Confessions, the article of justification is central for all church teaching. See, for instance, The Formula of Concord, Solid Declaration, III.6 (BC 2000:563), quoting the Apology, IV.2–3 (BC 2000: 120) and Luther's comments on Psalm 117 (Luther's Works 14:37). The connection to ethics is demonstrated in the Augsburg Confession, IV–VI and XX and the Apology, art. IV, especially par. 122–182 (BC 2000: 140–49).

138 theology teaches that salvation is by God’s grace alone and not dependent upon human 139 action. We receive in trust, as Paul declares, “the righteousness of God through faith in Jesus 140 Christ for all who believe” (Romans 3:21–22).

- 141 • Justified by faith, Lutherans understand that, because of God’s gift, their freedom in Christ
142 leads to a vocation of responsible and humble service to the neighbor (Romans 13:8–10).
- 143 • Our vocation of service leads us to live out our responsibilities primarily in light of and in 144 response to the neighbor’s needs, often in complex and sometimes tragic situations.
- 145 • God’s mercy and compassion instill in us the capacity to empathize with others as “the love 146 of Christ urges us on” (2 Corinthians 5:14). They teach us to walk with each other in joy, 147 humility, and tender care.
- 148 • The love of God and neighbor, fulfilled by faith alone, are the two commandments by which 149 Christ taught us to measure and interpret every other commandment in Scripture (Matthew 150 22:36–40).

152 God’s continuing creation

153 Christians believe that God is the creator of all that is and that this ongoing handiwork is good,
154 good, and very good! (Genesis 1:31). Both narratives of God’s creative activity in the book of 155 Genesis (Genesis 1 and 2) reveal God’s goodness and desire for close relationship with human 156 beings as integral to the ongoing handiwork of creation. In Genesis 1, this desire is expressed in 157 humanity’s creation—male and female—in the image of God. In Genesis 2, that close
158 relationship is revealed as God scoops up and breathes life into earth to form humankind. As a 159 mark of personal confidence, the Creator even entrusts to human beings the task of naming and 160 tending the inhabitants of the earth God so clearly loves. The tender love and goodness of God’s 161 creative activity includes sexuality and gendered bodies (Genesis 2:23–25).

163 Just as both creation narratives reveal how God intends a relationship of trust with humanity, so
164 also the creation of male and female (Genesis 1) and the companionship of Adam and Eve
165 (Genesis 2) reveal that human beings are created for trusting relationships with each other. In 166 these narratives of God’s creative activity, we understand from the beginning that love and trust 167 are at the heart of God’s relationship with human beings. We also understand that creation is 168 God’s ongoing activity and not yet complete.

170 The biblical narratives also depict how people violate God’s trust, turning away from God
171 (Genesis 3). They want to be like God. They make excuses and apportion blame. They hide from 172 God. They cover their nakedness. The full breakdown of relationship enters, complete with curses 173 and exile, as depicted in the betrayal of brother against brother (Genesis 4). The relationship of 174 trust with God and each other, entailed in the image of God, is broken: people sin, that is, human 175 beings resist their own God-given identity and destiny.

177 Nevertheless, God remains faithful, seeking out and inviting all into intimate relationship as sons
178 and daughters. This dignity of the human being reflects God’s deep love and stands against all
179 forms of violence, discrimination, and injustice. Scripture reveals to believers that just as God 180 does not abandon that which God loves, neither should we.

182 We recognize, therefore, our need for God’s law to order and preserve the world, expose our sins, 183 and to show us the depth of our capacity to turn away from God and neighbor.

184 And yet we are consoled and encouraged because, even in the face of broken trust, God includes 185 all of creation in the unfolding of the human community and the world. As human beings, we 186 participate in creation's work that continues even now in fruitfulness and productivity.⁷

188 For believers, it is hope in God's future, not in an idealized past,⁸ that inspires participation in 189 God's changing, open, and inexhaustible creation. Christians believe that God's promised future
190 includes the transformation of the whole creation (Romans 8:19–25). Guided by this vision, 191 Christians anticipate and live out the values of God's promised future concretely in the present.

193 Through the saving work of Jesus Christ, we understand how Scripture ultimately is future
194 oriented and filled with promise; creation is fulfilled in new creation (2 Corinthians 5: 17; 195 Revelation 21:1–5; 2 Corinthians 3:18, Isaiah 43:16–21). Even now, by the power of the Holy 196 Spirit, our lives may reflect the love of Christ crucified and risen. "The life I now live in the 197 flesh," declares Paul, "I live by faith in the Son of God, who loved me and gave himself for me"
198 (Galatians 2:20). Thus, Christ-like love for the neighbor informs all our activities, sexual and 199 otherwise, now and into God's future. In anticipation of that future, the ethics of sexuality is thus 200 not purely a personal matter, but one that affects the witness of the Christian community and the 201 well-being of the larger community (1 Corinthians 6:19; Galatians 6:10; Revelation 21:8).

203 God's law at work in the world

204 As Lutherans, we believe that God has given the law not only to reveal sin and order society (1 205 Timothy 1:9), but also to point us to God's intentions and promises for our lives.

207 Luther described two functions of the law, one theological and the other political or civil.⁹ The 208 theological use of the law reveals sin, confronting us when we have broken our relationship with 209 God and driving us to the forgiveness offered in the Gospel. When the law forces us to examine 210 the extent to which we are ensnared—individually and collectively—in patterns of self-serving, 211 exploitation, abuse, and shame, we experience the power of the theological use of the law in
212 revealing to us the brokenness of our relationship with God. Knowing that we can do nothing to

213 bring about our own salvation, Lutherans reject the notion that we can perfect either ourselves or 214 society.

216 The civil use of the law, at the same time, provides order in society to support the maintenance of 217 peace and justice in this imperfect world. The function of the civil law is, in a sinful world, to 218 protect from harm all those whom God loves, particularly the most vulnerable.¹⁰

220 Lutherans understand that God’s law, in its civil use, permeates and undergirds basic structures of 221 human society to support life and protect all people in a world that remains under the sway of sin.
222 Such social structures,¹¹ as the Lutheran Confessions identify them, include ministry, marriage
223 and family, civil authority, and daily work.¹² Because these structures are temporal, anticipating 224 the arrival of God’s promised future, they must respond continually to human needs for 225 protection and flourishing.

227 The Ten Commandments

228 When asked to summarize what God requires in the law, most Christians will turn first to the Ten 229 Commandments (Exodus 20:1–17) as God’s guide for their own behavior and that of others.
230 What is distinctive about these commandments for Lutherans is that we understand them in light
231 of faith, which confesses God as creator and redeemer of the world. Thus, in addition to revealing
232 human sin, they constrain wrong behavior and point the way for us to serve the neighbor and care 233 for the world.

235 The first three commandments together point to our need as sinful human beings “to fear, love, 236 and trust in God above all things.” The remaining seven describe our responsibility to serve the 237 neighbor, especially the most vulnerable. They identify those actions that violate trust and destroy 238 relationships between people and within community. They also instruct us how to protect and 239 nurture relationships and build up the community: to honor those wielding legitimate authority 240 (fourth); preserve and enhance life (fifth); support boundaries, decency, and faithfulness in sexual 241 relations (sixth); prevent exploitation (seventh); and put the best construction on the actions of all 242 (eighth).

As such they came to indicate the establishment of human society in a hierarchy of fixed and unchanging social arrangements. On this basis, at one time some Lutheran theologians objected to the democratic developments in modern states on the grounds of the divine right of kings, defended the legitimacy of Hitler’s regime, or rejected the ordination of women as contrary to nature. While “orders of creation” also has been theologically enriching within Lutheran tradition, the concept of social structures is used here because it is less technical and more suggestive of God’s ongoing creative activity to shape and reshape social structures for human protection and good.

¹² Augsburg Confession, XVI, 48–52; Apology, XVI, 231–33; Small Catechism, Household Chart, 365–67; Large Catechism, Ten Commandments, 400–25 in: The Book of Concord, eds. Kolb and Wengert.

243 The ninth and tenth commandments “fence the heart.” They show us that not only individual acts 244 but also thoughts, words, and legal actions done for base motives are wrong and they invite us to 245 right action. All these things honor God by loving the neighbor.

247 The sixth commandment relates in a particular way to human sexuality. To this end, as Luther 248 wrote in the Small Catechism, “We are to fear and love God so that we lead pure and decent lives 249 in word and deed, and each of us loves and honors his or her spouse.”¹³

251 When this commandment is violated, many things are adulterated—relationships are damaged, 252 people are betrayed and harmed. Promiscuity and sexual activity without a spirit of mutuality and 253 commitment are sinful because of their destructive consequences for individuals, relationships, 254 and the community. The Apostle Paul’s list of vices (e.g., fornication, impurity, licentiousness, 255 idolatry) warns believers of the dangers of gratifying “the desires of the flesh,” thereby turning 256 away from belonging to Christ and God’s kingdom (Galatians 5:19–21). The breakdown of trust
257 through the sexual adulteration of the bonds of the committed, intimate, and protected
258 relationship of marriage wreaks havoc for the family and the community, as well as for the people 259 involved.

261 When this commandment is kept, however, care and attention are given to all aspects of life and 262 behavior, including sexuality, which creates marriage relationships and practices of trust. “There
263 is no law against such things,” declares Paul, because “love, joy, peace, patience, kindness, 264 generosity, faithfulness, gentleness, and self-control” are the “fruit of the Spirit” (Galatians 5:22–

267 We are called to participate in God’s continuing creation as people who seek to fear, love, and 268 trust in God above all things. As such, we strive to lead lives that uphold relationships and a 269 social order where human beings can thrive, and to support one another in those endeavors. As 270 sinners justified through the Gospel we are able to receive creation fully as gift so that we can 271 serve our neighbor in need freely.

273 Our vocation to serve the neighbor

274 We do not live in private worlds without thought or consideration for historic events or the impact 275 of our actions on individuals, the community, or the environment. Rather, the responsibility to 276 serve the neighbor through our daily callings seeks to shape human relationships and a world
277 community that honors God and anticipates God’s future transformation of all of creation. In so 278 doing, all people, in whatever situation they find themselves, are called to actively promote the 279 good of the neighbor.

281 We recognize the complex and varied callings people have in relation to human sexuality: being 282 in relationships, being single, being a friend, living in a young or aging body, being male or 283 female, being young or old, or having different sexual orientations and gender identities. In 284 whatever the situation, all people are called to build trust in relationships and in the community.

¹³*The Small Catechism*, Ten Commandments, par. 12, 353 in: The Book of Concord, eds. Kolb and Wengert.

285 The way we live out these callings, of course, will be flawed and imperfect. As forgiven sinners, 286 we recognize through faith that our imperfect lives are means by which God cares for and 287 sustains creation. We can live both humbly and boldly, knowing that our efforts are still infused 288 with God's love and blessing for ourselves, our neighbors, and the world. By the mercy of God, 289 in the midst of evil, betrayal, brokenness, loneliness, and loss, we dare to believe that 290 opportunities do open, forgiveness is sought and tendered, good may be rescued, and trust can be 291 restored.

293 Lutheran social ethics

294 Lutherans understand human sexuality, and ethics in general, to be part of God's rule in this 295 world, in contrast to God's rule in the coming world through the Gospel. "We know," declares
296 Paul, "that the whole creation has been groaning in labor pains until now; and not only the 297 creation, but we ourselves, who have the first fruits of the Spirit, groan inwardly while we wait
298 for adoption, the redemption of our bodies" (Romans 8:22–23). Therefore, we believe that the 299 way we order our lives in matters of human sexuality is important to faithful living, but is not 300 central to determining our salvation. We are able to be realistic and merciful with respect to our 301 physical and emotional realities, not striving for angelic perfection as if our salvation were at 302 stake. Even marriage is an earthly blessing on this side of heaven (Matthew 22:30).¹⁴

303

304 A Lutheran approach to ethics makes use of Martin Luther's understanding of the two realms of 305 God's action.¹⁵ With the left hand (worldly realm), God rules in this world, maintaining order and 306 restraining evil through the law and reason. With the right hand (spiritual realm), God brings in 307 the coming world of Christ's rule where sin, death, and evil will reign no longer. This new world
308 is experienced by faith alone, most clearly when God announces in Word and sacraments the 309 forgiveness of sins, life, and salvation.

311 Set free by the death and resurrection of Christ (the spiritual realm), Christians are sent back into 312 this created world, which is experienced no longer as a threat, but as God's gift. There we are 313 called to love and serve the neighbor, and to uphold and promote human community and the 314 preservation of creation. This is work we undertake not only with other Christians, but together 315 with all people of good will.

317 As we determine how to love and serve the neighbor in a complex world, Lutherans rely on the 318 Scriptures. We also are guided by the Lutheran Confessions, and we bring to this task a particular
319 appreciation for the gifts of knowledge and learning. We believe that God also provides insights

¹⁴ "The Lutheran reformers developed a helpful approach to dealing with matters of morality and ethics. It serves both to safeguard the Gospel against the temptations for additional requirements than the grace of God, and to see within which context the issues of family, marriage and human sexuality can be addressed from a Lutheran point of view. Hence, we suggest that the doctrine of the two kingdoms can be applied as a useful tool to deal with these matters." The Lutheran World Federation: Marriage, Family and Human Sexuality Proposed Guidelines and Processes for Respectful Dialogue, LWF Report, 6. www.lutheranworld.org/Council/2007/20070322-Council.html (February, 1, 2009) (The link for the report can be found at the bottom of the Web page.) This report was received at the LWF Council in March 2007 and commended to LWF member churches.

320 to us through reason, imagination, the social and physical sciences, cultural understanding, and 321 the creative arts (Philippians 4:8). One reason Lutherans have engaged so deeply in education
322 and research is that we believe God works through such means to guide us in reading Scripture
323 and in understanding how we will live in a world of continuing complexity and change.¹⁶
324

325 Thus, we recognize that this church’s deliberations related to human sexuality require our best 326 moral discernment and practical wisdom in the worldly realm even though these matters are not 327 central to determining our salvation. We also understand that in this realm faithful people can and 328 will come to different conclusions sometimes about what constitutes responsible action.
329 Therefore, this social statement seeks to assist this church in discerning what best serves the 330 neighbor in the complexity of human relationships and social needs in the midst of daily life.
331
332

333 III Trust and human sexuality¹⁷

334

335 God loves human life so much that “the Word became flesh” (John 1:14). We know, therefore,
336 that God’s love embraces us totally, including our sexuality. We also know that God created each 337 of us not only as individuals, but also as people who live in a variety of social communities and 338 contexts. In response to God’s love for us, we seek life-giving relationships with others and create 339 social structures and practices that support such relationships.

341 The complexity of human sexuality

342 God created human beings to be in relationship with each other and continually blesses us with 343 diverse powers, which we use in living out those relationships. These include powers for action, 344 reasoning, imagination, and creativity.

346 Sexuality especially involves the powers or capacities to form deep and lasting bonds, to give and 347 receive pleasure, and to conceive and bear children. Sexuality can be integral to the desire to 348 commit oneself to life with another, to touch and be touched, and to love and be loved. Such 349 powers are complex and ambiguous. They can be used well or badly. They can bring astonishing 350 joy and delight. Such powers can serve God and serve the neighbor. They also can hurt self or 351 hurt the neighbor. Sexuality finds expression at the extreme ends of human experience: in love, 352 care, and security; or lust, cold indifference, and exploitation.

¹⁷ This statement attempts to maintain the distinctions frequently made between “sexual/sexuality,” “sex,” and “gender.” Generally speaking “sexual/sexuality” here refers to biological facts, while “sex” refers to behavior, as in “having sex.” “Gender” is reserved, most often, to designate the social and cultural classifications and constructions of biology and behavior. These distinctions are, of course, hard to maintain with precision, but are consistent with dictionary definitions. The following selected definitions are taken from William Morris, ed., The American Heritage Dictionary of the English Language (Boston: American Heritage Publishing Co., Inc., 1969–1970.): Sexuality: “The quality of possessing a sexual character or potency.” Sex: “The sexual urge or instinct as it manifests itself in behavior;” or “Sexual intercourse.”; Gender: “Classification of sex.”

354 Sexuality consists of a rich and diverse combination of relational, emotional, and physical 355 interactions and possibilities. It surely does not consist solely of erotic desire. Erotic desire, in the 356 narrow sense, is only one component of the relational bonds that humans crave as sexual beings.
357 Although not all relationships are sexual, at some level most sexual relationships are about 358 companionship. Although some people may remain single, either intentionally or unintentionally, 359 all people need and delight in companionship and all are vulnerable to loneliness.

361 The need to share our lives with others is a profound good (Genesis 2:18). The counsel to love 362 and care for the neighbor is not a command that is foreign to our created natures; rather, reaching 363 out in love and care is part of who we are as relational and sexual beings. Even if we never have 364 sexual intimacy, we all seek and respond to the bonds and needs of relationships.

366 Sexual love—the complex interplay of longing, erotic attraction, self-giving and receiving 367 defined by trust—is a wondrous gift. The longing for connection, however, also can render 368 human beings susceptible to pain, isolation, and harm. The desire for sexual love, therefore, does 369 not by itself constitute a moral justification for sexual behavior. Giving and receiving love 370 always involves mixed motives and limited understanding of individual and communal 371 consequences.

373 The sharing of love and sexual intimacy within the mutuality of a mature and trusting relationship
374 can be a rich source of romance, delight, creativity, imagination, restraint, desire, pleasure, safety, 375 and deep contentment that provide the context for individuals, family, and the community to 376 thrive.

378 Though sexual love remains God’s good gift, sin permeates human sexuality as it does all of life.
379 When expressed immaturely, irresponsibly, or with hurtful intent, then love—or its counterfeit,
380 coercive power—can lead to harm and even death. Too often lust is mistaken for love, which in 381 turn becomes the rationale for selfish behaviors. When infatuation, lust, and self-gratification take 382 the place of the responsibilities of love, cascading consequences result that can be devastating for 383 partners, children, families, and society.

385 In recognizing the many ways in which people misuse power and love, we need to be honest
386 about sin and the finite limitations of human beings. We also recognize the complexity of the 387 human and societal forces that drive the desire for companionship, for intimate relation with 388 another, for belonging, and for worth. The deep interconnectedness of the body with the mind and 389 spirit suggest the complexity of such situations. The biblical narratives both rejoice in the 390 splendor of sexual attraction (Song of Songs 4) and are candid about the harm that can result from 391 human sexuality (2 Samuel 11; 2 Samuel 13; Matthew 5:27–30).

393 Social trust and the common good

394 Trust is a critical element that holds together couples and relationships, households and families, 395 social structures and institutions. We normally relate concepts of trust, promise, loyalty, and 396 reliance to individual relationships. These concepts, however, also describe economic life, 397 political arrangements, social policies, and social structures. Contemporary social scientists call 398 attention to these almost invisible bonds of trust and reliance that are necessary for a well-

399 functioning society.¹⁸ They are beginning to articulate what close-knit communities have long 400 known: social trust undergirds healthy societies.

402 Trust is essential for the good of society. This is true in general terms for the proper functioning 403 of communities and pertains especially to the social practices and institutions that affect and are 404 affected by human sexuality. The development of social trust must be a central concern for all
405 who seek the good of the neighbor in the pursuit of justice and the common good. Lutherans
406 understand that social structures cannot create faith, hope, and love, but they trust that God does 407 bless and provide appropriate gifts through such structures and, in some cases, in spite of them.
408

409 The concept of social trust has long been central to both Jewish and Christian social and political 410 thought through the focus on the common good and the need of the neighbor. As the Apostle Paul 411 writes, “So then, whenever we have an opportunity, let us work for the good of all...” (Galatians 412 6:10).¹⁹

414 When human beings serve their neighbor rather than themselves, they are acting in ways that 415 enhance social trust. However, the challenge of establishing, maintaining, and fostering social 416 trust involves more than private actions. It also requires shaping legal, commercial, technological,
417 and civic structures for the common good. Examples include the social institutions of the family, 418 the conduct of commerce, laws enacted and enforced by government, and community standards.
419 A justice-oriented legal code, social contracts and institutions that protect the weak and most 420 vulnerable, and the protection of human rights all illustrate the kinds of things that can contribute 421 to and support social trust.²⁰

423 Social trust is grounded in the practice of mutual respect for the dignity of all people and their 424 consciences. Strong communities ensure social trust when they provide social support for 425 disagreement and dissent, and nurture the values of mutual respect and regard for the opinions of 426 others. Within the church community, we contribute to respect for the understandings and 427 experiences of others by living out the eighth commandment: “We do not tell lies about our 428 neighbors, betray or slander them, or destroy their reputations. Instead we...come to their defense, 429 speak well of them, and interpret everything they do in the best possible light.”²¹

431 As this church and its members engage the changes and challenges of contemporary society 432 related to human sexuality, careful thought must be given to which changes enhance and which

¹⁸ One excellent source in the literature is theorist Niklas Luhmann. See Trust and Power: Two Works by Niklas Luhmann; trans. Howard Davis, John Raffan, Kathryn Rooney Chichester (New York: John Wiley & Sons, 1979).

²¹ Small Catechism, Ten Commandments, par. 16, 353 in: The Book of Concord, eds. Kolb and Wengert.

434 seek the good of the neighbor in the pursuit of justice and the common good. This church must be 435 a leader in refocusing attention on practices and attitudes that build social trust. Likewise, it must 436 contribute to the development of responsible economic and social policies and practices that 437 shape the expression of sexuality within social life.

439 Human sexuality and our calling to establish trust

440 Sexual relationships may be among our most profoundly intimate, crucial, and self-giving 441 expressions of trust. Here our human lives are vulnerable to joy and delight and to hurt and 442 exploitation. From spiritual intimacy with God to the closest physical intimacy with another, 443 relationships flourish according to the depth and trustworthiness of commitments. In the arena of 444 human sexuality, no human relationships can thrive in the absence of trust.

446 Human beings learn about trust from God. When the Lutheran Confessions discuss faith in God, 447 they understand it fundamentally as trust²² or absolute confidence in God. In faith nurtured by the 448 Holy Spirit through Word and sacrament, we entrust our whole lives to God. We experience
449 God's unfailing trustworthiness in God's relationship with us through the Gospel and through 450 God's deep mercy and compassion in response to our human frailty. In response, as forgiven and 451 justified people, we seek to respond to God's love for us through care for the neighbor, fostering 452 trust in order that individuals and society might flourish.

454 What then, does trust in relation to human sexuality look like when understood in terms of service
455 to the neighbor? In responding to this question, we reflect on God's love for and continuing 456 involvement in creation and on the saving action of Jesus Christ for the salvation of the world.
457 We look to Scripture, to the Lutheran Confessions, to the social and physical sciences, and to 458 human reason, mercy, and compassion. In so doing, we boldly but humbly affirm that trustworthy 459 relationships and social structures will:

- 460 • promote, value, and respect the human dignity of each individual;
461 • protect all from physical, emotional, and spiritual harm;
462 • demonstrate mercy, compassion, and justice for all, especially the "least of these"— those 463 who are most vulnerable in relationships and in society;
464 • ensure accountability and responsibility in relationships and the community;
465 • promote the welfare of individuals and the common good of society; and 466 • value the security and protection afforded through the making of promises, including social 467 and contractual commitments.

469 These foundational and protective conditions provide the necessary context and support for 470 trusting relationships that are:

- 471 • loving, that include and reflect an abundance of agape (unlimited love, forgiveness,
472 compassion, care and concern), eros (passion, excitement and joy), and philia (care for the 473 neighbor);
474 • life-giving, where affirmation is mutually shared, encouragement is given and received, and 475 individual talents are nurtured and supported;
476 • self-giving in the face of both opportunities and challenges;
477 • fulfilling, that is, a place where a spirit of joy and an atmosphere of peace prevails;

²² The Latin version of the Augsburg Confession uses the word fiducia (trust).

- 478 • nurturing of physical, emotional, and spiritual well-being;
- 479 • marked by truth-telling and honesty;
- 480 • faithful in word and deed, including sexual fidelity;
- 481 • committed, demonstrating loyalty in the face of difficult as well as good times;
- 482 • supportive for all who grow old, are vulnerable or weak;
- 483 • hospitable, offering support and encouragement to others;
- 484 • a blessing to society and serving the good of the neighbor.

487 IV Sexuality and social structures that enhance social trust

488

489 Lutherans believe that God works through social structures for the good of society. The Lutheran 490 Confessions identify marriage and the family as foundational structures that support human 491 community.

493 Marriage: shelter and context for trust

494 Trust is a quality of relationship that, while never perfected, is nurtured and reinforced over time.
495 The trust and mutuality afforded by marriage can make marriage one of the most beautiful,
496 abiding, and transformative forms of human relationship. Depth of care, matched to an intimacy 497 of touch, creates relationships much stronger than simple and momentary erotic interest. Sexual 498 intimacy, together with promises of fidelity and public accountability, nurtures bonds that allow 499 people to thrive and provides a rich context for the care and support of children.

501 Marriage is a covenant of mutual promises, commitment, and hope authorized legally by the state
502 and blessed by God. The historic Christian tradition and the Lutheran Confessions have 503 recognized marriage as a covenant between a man and a woman, reflecting Mark 10: 6–9: “But 504 from the beginning of creation, God made them male and female. For this reason a man shall 505 leave his father and mother and be joined to his wife, and the two shall become one flesh. So they 506 are no longer two, but one flesh. Therefore what God has joined together, let no one put asunder.”
507 (Jesus here recalls Genesis 1:27; 2:23–24.)

509 Lutherans have long affirmed that the public accountability of marriage, as expressed through a 510 legal contract, provides the necessary social support and social trust for relationships that are 511 intended to be sustained throughout life and within changing and often challenging life situations.
512 In this country, pastors carry both legal and religious responsibilities for marriage. In carrying out 513 these responsibilities, pastors hold and exercise pastoral discretion for the decision to marry in the 514 church. In the community of the church they preside over the mutual promises made between a 515 couple seeking the lifelong, monogamous, and faithful relationship of marriage.

517 Marriage requires constant care and cultivation. It is intended to protect the creation and nurturing 518 of mutual trust and love as one foundation of human community. It is a binding relationship that 519 provides conditions for personal well-being, the flourishing of the partner, and the possibility of 520 procreation and the nurturing of children. It is also intended to be a blessing to the community
521 and the world. Because of promises of fidelity and public accountability, marriage provides a 522 context of love, trust, honesty, and commitment within which a couple can express the profound 523 joy of relationship as well as address the troubles they encounter throughout life.

524 Christians believe that marriage is not solely to legitimate physical sexual intimacy, but to 525 support long-term and durable communion for the good of others.²³ It is a communion within 526 which the play and delight of physical love are crucial expressions of the depth of trust, and in 527 which lovemaking can be a tender and generous act of self-giving that tends to the joy and 528 pleasure of the other.

530 The public character of marriage also implies a civil responsibility. Marriage is intended not only
531 to protect the people who are married, but to signal to the community their intention to live a 532 peaceful and mutually fulfilling life, even as they endeavor to strengthen the community in which 533 they live. The public promises of marriage between a man and a woman, therefore, also protect 534 the community by holding people accountable to their vows. Fidelity to promises blesses all who 535 depend on this trust within and beyond the marriage.

537 The Christian commitment to marriage recognizes that sin enters all relationships, both within 538 and outside the institution of marriage. All marriages fall short of intentions and difficulties are 539 inevitable, both because of the different needs and desires of the two individuals, and because of 540 sin, which places the anxious concern for self before the needs of the other. Infidelity to marriage 541 promises betrays the intimate trust of the partner, the security of the family, and the public trust of 542 the community.

544 Precisely because marriage is the place where deep human trust and needs abide, it also can be a
545 place of great harm. Many experience neither love nor trust within marriage. Harming another 546 emotionally, physically, or spiritually, including through the misuse or abuse of power, is a 547 profound injury. It is also a betrayal and violation of the shelter and trust that are intended within 548 the marriage relationship. Particular care must be taken to support and find safe haven for all who 549 are at risk within a marriage. This includes those whose sense of self is destroyed or damaged
550 within the marriage relationship and, therefore, whose ability to act or advocate for their own 551 health and safety may be inhibited or lost.

553 This church recognizes that in some situations the trust upon which marriage is built becomes so 554 deeply damaged or is so deeply flawed that the marriage itself must come to a legal end (Matthew 555 19:3–12). This church does not treat divorce lightly nor does it disregard the responsibilities of 556 marriage. However, in such situations, it provides support to the people involved and all who are 557 affected. Divorced individuals are encouraged to avail themselves of pastoral care, to be assured
558 of God’s presence, forgiveness, and healing, and to remain in the communion of the church, 559 recognizing the all-encompassing mercy of God.

561 This church will provide supportive pastoral care to those who are divorced. Further, it believes 562 that those who wish to remarry may gain wisdom from the past and may be assured of the 563 Gospel’s freedom, in the midst of brokenness and forgiveness, to enter into their new 564 responsibilities in joy and hope. This church will tend pastorally to the special concerns of ²³Luther’s concluding explanation of the sixth commandment says about marriage: “...above all it is essential that husband and wife live together in love and harmony, cherishing each other wholeheartedly and with perfect fidelity.” Large Catechism, Ten Commandments, par. 219, 415 in: The Book of Concord, eds. Kolb and Wengert.

565 blended families, children of divorced parents, and to the particular tensions that may accompany 566 family breakdown and transition.

568 Despite its awareness of the presence of sin and failure in marriage, the Christian tradition places
569 great emphasis on the value of marriage for a husband and wife. It is in marriage that the highest 570 degrees of physical intimacy are matched with and protected by the highest levels of binding
571 commitment, including legal protection. It is in marriage that public promises of lifetime 572 commitment can create the foundation for trust, intimacy, and safety.

574 Both the couple's intent in their lifelong promises and the civil requirements for marriage are 575 important. Mutual promises of enduring care and fidelity, made before God, allow a couple to 576 open themselves to each other. They permit the sharing of profound and tender affection as well
577 as deep vulnerabilities and anxieties. The legal contract creates a public arrangement within 578 which a couple may safely and equitably share their assets and resources, arrive at joint decisions, 579 anticipate children, protect and nurture them, and plan for a shared future.

581 The church's historical experience supports its confidence that solemn promises, made before a 582 company of witnesses who ask for God's blessing on a man and a woman, have the power to 583 create a unique framework within which two people, a new family, and the community may 584 thrive. Consistent with that experience, this church has confidence that such promises, supported 585 by the contractual framework of civil law, can create a lifetime relationship of commitment and 586 cooperation.

588 It must be noted that some, though not all, in this church and within the larger Christian 589 community, conclude that marriage is also the appropriate term to use in describing similar 590 benefits, protection, and support for same-gender couples entering into lifelong monogamous
591 relationships. They believe that such accountable relationships also provide the necessary
592 foundation that supports trust and familial and community thriving. Other contractual agreements 593 such as civil unions also seek to provide some of these protections and to hold those involved in 594 such relationships accountable to one another and to society.

596 Lifelong monogamous same-gender relationships

597 Within the last decades, this church has begun to understand and experience in new ways the 598 need of same-gender-oriented individuals to seek relationships of lifelong companionship and 599 commitment as well as public accountability and legal support for those commitments. At the 600 same time, public debates and deliberations have continued regarding evolving understandings of 601 human sexuality in medicine, social science, and corresponding public policy about same-gender 602 relationships.

604 We in the ELCA recognize that many of our sisters and brothers in same-gender relationships
605 sincerely desire the support of other Christians for living faithfully in all aspects of their lives, 606 including their sexual fidelity. In response, we have drawn deeply on our Lutheran theological 607 heritage and Scripture. This has led, however, to differing and conscience-bound understandings
608 about the place of such relationships within the Christian community. We have come to various 609 conclusions concerning how to regard lifelong, monogamous same-gender relationships, 610 including whether and how to publicly recognize their lifelong commitments.

611 While Lutherans hold various convictions regarding lifelong, monogamous, same-gender
612 relationships, this church is united on many critical issues.²⁴ It opposes all forms of verbal or 613 physical harassment and assault based on sexual orientation. It supports legislation and policies to 614 protect civil rights and to prohibit discrimination in housing, employment, and public services. It
615 has called upon congregations and members to welcome, care for, and support same-gender 616 couples and their families, and to advocate for their legal protection.

618 The ELCA recognizes that it has a pastoral responsibility to all children of God. This includes a 619 pastoral responsibility to those who are same-gender in their orientation and to those who are 620 seeking counsel about their sexual self-understanding. All are encouraged to avail themselves of 621 the means of grace and pastoral care.

623 This church also acknowledges that consensus does not exist concerning how to regard same-
624 gender committed relationships, even after many years of thoughtful, respectful, and faithful
625 study and conversation. We do not have agreement on whether this church should honor these 626 relationships, uplift, shelter and protect them, or on precisely how it is appropriate to do so.

628 In response, this church draws on the foundational Lutheran understanding that the baptized are 629 called to discern God's love in service to the neighbor. In our Christian freedom, we therefore 630 seek responsible actions that serve others and do so with humility and deep respect for the 631 conscience-bound beliefs of others. We understand that, in this discernment about ethics and 632 church practice, faithful people can and will come to different conclusions about the meaning of 633 Scripture²⁵ and about what constitutes responsible action. We further believe that this church, on 634 the basis of "the bound conscience,"²⁶ will include these different understandings and practices
635 within its life as it seeks to live out its mission and ministry in the world.

²⁵ "The difference between interpreters should not be understood as a conflict between those who seek to be 'true to Scripture' and those who seek to 'twist the Bible' to their own liking. The disagreements are genuine." This is the conclusion of Dr. Arland J. Hultgren and Dr. Walter F. Taylor Jr. Both are members of the ELCA and both are highly regarded scholars and teachers. ²⁶ The Apostle Paul testifies to conscience as the unconditional moral responsibility of the individual before God (Romans 2:15–16). In the face of different conclusions about what constitutes responsible action, the concept of "the conscience" becomes pivotal.

When the clear word of God's saving action by grace through faith is at stake, Christian conscience becomes as adamant as Paul, who opposed those who insisted upon circumcision. (Galatians 1:8). In the same way Luther announced at his trial for heresy, "Unless I am persuaded by the testimony of Scripture and by clear reason ... I am conquered by the Scripture passages I have adduced and my conscience is captive to the words of God. I neither can nor desire to recant anything, when to do so against conscience would be neither safe nor wholesome" (WA 7: 838; Luther's Works 32:112).

However, when the question is about morality or church practice, the Pauline and Lutheran witness is less adamant and believes we may be called to respect the bound conscience of the neighbor. That is, if 636 This church recognizes that, with conviction and integrity:

637

- 638 • On the basis of conscience-bound belief, some are convinced that same-gender sexual 639 behavior is sinful, contrary to biblical teaching and their understanding of natural law. They 640 believe same-gender sexual behavior carries the grave danger of unrepentant sin. They 641 therefore conclude that the neighbor and the community are best served by calling people in 642 same-gender sexual relationships to repentance for that behavior and to a celibate lifestyle.
643 Such decisions are intended to be accompanied by pastoral response and community support.
644
- 645 • On the basis of conscience-bound belief, some are convinced that homosexuality and even 646 lifelong, monogamous, homosexual relationships reflect a broken world in which some 647 relationships do not pattern themselves after the creation God intended. While they 648 acknowledge that such relationships may be lived out with mutuality and care, they do not 649 believe that the neighbor or community are best served by publicly recognizing such 650 relationships as traditional marriage.
651
- 652 • On the basis of conscience-bound belief, some are convinced that the scriptural witness does 653 not address the context of sexual orientation and lifelong loving and committed relationships
654 that we experience today. They believe that the neighbor and community are best served 655 when same-gender relationships are honored and held to high standards and public 656 accountability, but they do not equate these relationships with marriage. They do, however, 657 affirm the need for community support and the role of pastoral care, and may wish to 658 surround lifelong monogamous relationships or covenant unions with prayer.
- 660 • On the basis of conscience-bound belief, some are convinced that the scriptural witness does 661 not address the context of sexual orientation and committed relationships that we experience
662 today. They believe that the neighbor and community are best served when same-gender 663 relationships are lived out with lifelong and monogamous commitments that are held to the 664 same rigorous standards, sexual ethics, and status as heterosexual marriage. They surround
665 such couples and their lifelong commitments with prayer to live in ways that glorify God,
666 find strength for the challenges that will be faced, and serve others. They believe same-667 gender couples should avail themselves of social and legal support for themselves, their 668 children and other dependents, and seek the highest legal accountability available for their 669 relationships.

salvation is not at stake in a particular question, Christians are free to give priority to the neighbor's well-being and will protect the conscience of the neighbor who may well view the same question in such a way as to affect faith itself. For example, Paul was confident that Christian freedom meant the Gospel of Jesus Christ was not at stake in questions of meat sacrificed to idols or the rituals of holy days (Romans 14, 1 Corinthians 8:10–14; and 10:23–30). Yet he insisted that, if a brother or sister did not understand this freedom and saw eating this meat as idolatry to a pagan god, the Christian was obligated to “walk in love” by eating just vegetables for the neighbor’s sake! (Romans 14:17–20).

This social statement draws upon this rich understanding of the role of conscience and calls upon this church, when in disagreement concerning matters around which salvation is not at stake, including human sexuality, to bear one another’s burdens (Galatians 6:2), honor the conscience and seek the well-being of the neighbor.

670 Although at this time this church lacks consensus on this matter, it encourages all people to live 671 out their faith in the local and global community of the baptized with profound respect for the 672 conscience-bound belief of the neighbor. This church calls for mutual respect in relationships and 673 for guidance that seeks the good of each individual and of the community. Regarding our life
674 together as we live with disagreement, the people in this church will continue to accompany one 675 another in study, prayer, discernment, pastoral care, and mutual respect.

676
677 Loving families: ground and source for social trust

678 One of the places where social trust is most important is in the context of the family. In 679 contemporary society, the term “family” includes a variety of forms, more akin to the older term
680 of “household,” exclusively employed by Luther to include immediate family members, relatives, 681 and others.

683 Lutherans understand that intimacy, trust, and safety, particularly for those most vulnerable, are 684 best sheltered within families. When safety and trust are eroded or destroyed within the family, it
685 becomes a dangerous or even demonic place where abuse can reign. Thus, Lutherans take great 686 care to support whatever creates and sustains strong families as a foundation and source of trust.

687
688 Children learn either trust or distrust from their earliest relationships of dependence upon parents
689 and others in the household. Patterns of loyalty and confidence established in the family can reach 690 into all future relationships. Those who do not learn to trust face significant obstacles to 691 becoming trustworthy individuals in the more complicated relationships of modern life and may 692 find it difficult to develop a mature and healthy sexuality.

694 The family is a primary source of trust precisely because of the remarkable level of commitment
695 and care that characterizes familial bonds. While scripture places family as secondary to the 696 community of God’s people (Matthew 10:37; 12:49), it also attests to the family’s foundational 697 role in protecting and nurturing human community (Exodus 20:12; Ephesians 6:1–4). The 698 Lutheran Confessions recognize this role²⁷ and the connection between family and sexuality in 699 their discussions of the commandments related to each.²⁸

701 This church regards the family as an indispensable social institution because of its role in 702 establishing conditions of trust and protection of the vulnerable. As such, society properly both 703 regulates and shelters families through family law that exists to ensure that these critical
704 responsibilities will be met and that dependent family members will be protected and treated
705 justly when households dissolve.²⁹

²⁹ These include laws governing marriage, dissolution of marriage, inheritance, guardianship, custody, parental rights and duties, property, pensions, social security, taxes, and health benefits. The interdependence and mutual responsibilities of married couples are crucial in welding them into a legal unit as well as a loving household. Parents and guardians are legally compelled to attend to the welfare, support,

706 Social service ministries of this and other churches work to secure the well-being of families in 707 many ways. They give particular attention to those who have no family or to families with limited 708 resources. They raise their moral voice to affirm and celebrate the life-giving importance of

710
711 At the same time, realistic awareness of weakness and sin prevents Lutherans from romanticizing
712 family life or setting up false ideals. In particular, sexual abuse or betrayal of promises and 713 commitments within the family constitute flagrant harm precisely because they occur within the 714 context where trust is most assumed.

716 This church recognizes its responsibility in congregations and through social ministry 717 organizations to support its members and others in all the difficulties that beset family life and to 718 seek ways to ensure and support the protection of the most vulnerable.

720 Many current social trends³⁰ in the United States and elsewhere properly raise concerns about the 721 health of families. While these trends do involve individuals who carry personal responsibility for 722 their choices, they also are driven by economic and social forces that are both complex in origin
723 and significantly resistant to correction.

725 In this country and throughout the twentieth century, the legally married, heterosexual “nuclear 726 family” has been supported by strong social conventions.³¹ The nuclear family is well-structured 727 to foster the development of trust in children and youth. The experience of millions of people and 728 recent social science findings demonstrate its ability to do so.³² This does not mean, however, 729 that it has always done so effectively. Families can shelter sexism or domestic violence and, in 730 such situations, the safety of children or others who are harmed is of utmost importance.

732 In this country and in our congregations, families are formed in many ways. There are natural and 733 adoptive families, foster families, blended families, families with a missing generation, and 734 families where the parents are the same gender. Millions of households in the U.S., and many in 735 our church, are headed by single parents—mostly women—whether widowed, divorced, or never 736 married. The critical issue with respect to the family is not whether it has a conventional form, protection, and education of their children and youth.

³¹ Scripture and the Lutheran Confessions assume and encourage households, similar in some ways to this model, but historically and currently there are wide variations that include many other family members, widowed heads of households, laborers, and the like.

³² This point and the supporting data may be found in various sources. One source is the attempt by Don S. Browning to summarize and employ that data for a constructive proposal in Equality and the Family: A Fundamental, Practical Theology of Children, Mothers, and Fathers in Modern Societies (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans Publishing Co., 2005). See especially the citations in chapters four and seven.

737 but how it performs indispensable individual and social tasks. All families have responsibility for 738 the tasks of providing safety, shielding intimacy, and developing trustworthy relationships.³³

740 This church's first response toward families and households should be one of welcome and 741 support that includes particularly the care for and safety of children. Children are to be invited 742 into the community of the baptized regardless of their family situation.

744 This church responds to the needs of families through its ministry and service in various settings.
745 It also has the task of addressing and advocating against social and economic trends that counter 746 the development of strong families.

748 Through the proclamation of God's Word and the sacraments, God creates and strengthens faith
749 and supports believers both inside and outside of families. Family life also is supported when its 750 members strive to meet reasonable expectations to forgive and seek forgiveness and to bear each
751 other's burdens responsibly. These practices honor God and, when learned in the context of a 752 loving and committed family, may lead to mature and healthy expressions of sexuality. When 753 trust has been betrayed in such situations, then forgiveness, loving correction, and reconciliation 754 must be attempted.

756 This church acknowledges with regret the way in which the misuse of historical teachings
757 concerning sexuality has harmed individuals, deepened suffering, or torn families apart. This 758 includes actions that abandon or shun people for unwed pregnancy or for a same-sex orientation.
759 Hate crimes and violence against those who are regarded as sexually different sometimes have 760 been publicly perpetrated in the name of Christ. Not only must such behaviors be denounced, but 761 this church must work toward greater understanding of sexual orientation and gender identity.³⁴
762 It must seek that which is positive and life-giving while protecting from all that is harmful and 763 destructive.

765 Since social trust is directly related to social justice, this church must call for justice in matters
766 relating to families and sexuality. Complex and profound changes have occurred in family law
767 over the past fifty years relating to divorce, alimony and child support, custody, adoption, 768 parental rights, and civil unions. The continuing evolution of family law is of vital importance as 769 legislators and courts strive to protect dependent individuals and justly assign responsibility for 770 their care.

772 These laws have a direct impact on patterns of social trust within households and networks of 773 kinship. Criminal statutes, state enforcement, and judicial handling of matters related to sexual 774 abuse, sexual harassment, sexual threats, and domestic violence require our close attention.
775 Victims of sexual violation must be able to rely on public institutions for intervention in troubled 776 relationships. They must be able to expect protection when their trust in an individual has been 777 abused.

³⁴ Sexual orientation is generally used to refer to an enduring pattern of emotional, romantic, and sexual attraction. Gender identity indicates a person's own sense of identification with a gender (male or female) regardless of physiological characteristics. See also footnote 17.

778 Society at large must ensure that all who are dependent upon others in the family for spiritual, 779 emotional, and physical well-being are protected by social policies and practices. Even social 780 institutions and practices not directly related to family institutions can and should facilitate and 781 support familial care and responsibility. Examples include: tax and poverty law, real estate and 782 zoning regulations, and insurance industry policies and practices.

784 The ELCA will support familial relationships as central to nurturing and sustaining trust and 785 security in human relationships. It will advocate for public policies that support and protect 786 families. This church commits itself to continued attention to and discernment about changing 787 family configurations and how they serve to shelter and protect relationships of mutual trust.

789 Protecting children and youth in and for trusting relationships

790 A strong and healthy family is a significant factor in the development of healthy individuals. The 791 context of a healthy family nurtures growth, enhances trust, and offers protection. This is 792 especially true for children and youth as they grow into sexual maturity.

794 Safety within and outside the family is of overriding importance because the damage done to 795 children and youth through sexual abuse or molestation can be remarkably deep and lasting. Such 796 harmful behavior may include inappropriate touching, exposure to pornography, exposing 797 genitals to children or inducing children to do the same, and sexual or genital relations involving 798 minors.

800 Criminal statutes prohibiting abuse and molestation contribute to the protection of children and 801 youth. This church supports the prosecution of any individual who commits a sexual crime
802 against a minor, including people in leadership positions in the church. Further, this church 803 affirms appropriate laws requiring the reporting of suspected child abuse to authorities in order to 804 prevent future harm to vulnerable minors who cannot protect themselves.

806 The ELCA also recognizes that congregations and other ministry sites must continue in their 807 efforts to be safe places for children and youth. Much work already has been done to help
808 congregations protect children. This church will continue its efforts for the protection of minors 809 who participate in church-sponsored events and programs. This church calls for the adoption of 810 preventive measures including educational programs, appropriate policies, and screening of 811 individuals who care for, supervise, or work with children within this church. It expects that all 812 church leaders will report all instances of suspected child abuse.

814 Matters of concern to both society and the church extend beyond abuse and molestation to 815 organized sexual exploitation. Commercial sexual exploitation is widespread throughout the 816 United States and around the world. It continues to grow and involves surprising numbers of 817 youth by taking advantage of their vulnerabilities.³⁵

819 This church strongly reaffirms its 2001 message, Commercial Sexual Exploitation, which states, 820 “Sexual exploitation in any situation, either personally or commercially, inside or outside legally

³⁵ “Commercial Sexual Exploitation” (Chicago: ELCA, 2001), 3.

822 human integrity.” This message notes that this is especially true with respect to the demonic
823 harm sexual exploitation visits on children and youth.³⁶
824 Children and youth live in a highly sexualized world. They are exposed early to patterns of adult
825 sexuality and are pressured to associate their bodies with practices that devalue them. Examples
826 include child beauty contests, sexually suggestive clothing, sexually charged prime time, cable
827 television programs, and movies. At an early age, children listen to sexualized music that is 828 deliberately marketed to them. They “date” as couples and engage in genital activity at earlier 829 ages. Children and youth are targets of sexual bullying, destructive language, and vicious humor.
830
831 The ELCA regards the over-exposure of emotionally maturing children and teens to adult
832 sexuality as a failing on the part of adults and society. It challenges all individuals and institutions 833 in society to fulfill their responsibility to protect and nurture children and youth and provide for 834 their appropriate development. Congregations should offer opportunities for adults to express 835 these concerns and explore solutions together.
837 Expanding cyberspace and other electronic media create new challenges to the protection of 838 children and youth. It is important that parents, society, and lawmakers continue to be extremely 839 vigilant to protect the well-being of children and youth in this electronic world with its often 840 hidden dangers. The widespread electronic availability of violent and degrading pornography 841 threatens children and youth as well as adults. It has the capacity to damage the normal sexual 842 development in those who view it, often obsessively and in secret. How to address this problem is 843 one of the most important child-protection issues of our time, and our church will be an active 844 participant in this important conversation.
846 The sexual education of children and teens will be supported as a priority by this church.
847 Anecdotal evidence among teens suggests that few parents or congregations meaningfully engage 848 young people in either sex education or healthy conversations about sexuality, even though teens
849 would welcome it.³⁷ This lack of engagement is remarkable, especially considering the associated 850 dangers. This church will give particular attention to how children and youth are supported, 851 nurtured, and accompanied in their sexual and relational formation.
853 Toward that end, this church reaffirms what it has said previously about providing comprehensive 854 sex education within the context of Christian faith.³⁸ This education must begin early and 855 emphasize responsibility and mutuality. Such education should focus on sustaining conversation 856 about what is good and what is harmful in ways appropriate to growing maturity levels. It should 857 avoid simply requiring compliance with approved or rejected behaviors, but should emphasize the 858 exploration of why certain behaviors are rejected because they are damaging, why and how some 859 pressures should be resisted, and what differentiates mature and rewarding sexual love from 860 exploitative and demeaning forms.

³⁷ Reports were quite consistent on these points both anecdotally and in informal polls among youth and youth leaders attending workshops in 2007 and 2008 for Free in Christ to Care for the Neighbor: Lutheran Youth Talk about Human Sexuality (Chicago: ELCA, 2007).

³⁸ The ELCA social statement on Abortion (Chicago: ELCA, 1991), 4–5.

862 Information about birth control, including the encouragement and support of sexual abstinence, is 863 an important component of responsibility. Such education should engage all in conversation 864 about the shared responsibility of couples to ensure the physical, emotional, and spiritual 865 protection of each person.
866 It therefore follows that the ELCA reaffirms its interest in and responsibility for the care and 867 protection of vulnerable children and youth. It understands itself as called to this mission through 868 the vocations of its members, its own institutional practices, and its public policy positions. This 869 work involves all adults, not only parents, since all contribute to the well-being of children and 870 youth in untold creative ways. It understands that all children and youth, both inside and outside 871 the church, are deserving of this church's concern.

874 V Sexuality and trust in relationships

875 876 Sexuality and self

877 Both sexuality and trust are fundamentally relational and grow out of the web of family ties and 878 social interaction. Healthy, trusting relationships shape confident, healthy, and responsible 879 people. We bring our failings, imperfections, and sin with us into our relationships, but part of 880 living out the calling and freedom of the Christian in those relationships includes being the best
881 we can be as individuals. This requires appropriate care for all aspects of a person, including the 882 body.³⁹

884 We are sexual beings from the beginning of our lives. The ancient psalmist envisioned the divine 885 mystery of our embodied lives long before science investigated our biological and genetic 886 complexity: "For it was you who formed my inward parts; you knit me together in my mother's 887 womb" (Psalm 139:13). The realities of our sexual bodies are visible in physical features and 888 powerful in less visible characteristics.
889

890 This means much more than that we are born with male, female, or sometimes with ambiguous
891 genitalia.⁴⁰ Our cells carry sex chromosomes and our endocrine systems infuse our bodies with 892 hormones. In ways that are still not fully understood, we develop strong gender identities at a
893 very early age. While there is still much to be learned about the biological complexity of human 894 beings, we have come to understand that this complexity suggests a variety of sexual orientations

898 and a perplexity and a challenge at all life stages and in all relational situations. The medical and

902 Sexual capabilities and experiences are part of life for all ages and physical abilities. One can 903 experience the sexual in music, art, literature, and the beauty of people and nature. One can take 904 sensual pleasure in food, touch, sound, smells, and activities. One can find expression for the self

907 One does not need to be in a relationship to experience one's sexuality. Bodies do not suddenly 908 become sexual at puberty and do not cease to be sexual when, for example, there are physical or 909 developmental limitations, menopause, erectile dysfunction, or the absence of a sexual partner.
910 This means that throughout our lives we need to find life-enhancing and appropriate ways of

913 We all have sexual identities that will find expression in our lives. We have sexual feelings that 914 we are aware of and sometimes need to be negotiated when we are interacting with friends, 915 courting a potential life partner, working closely with colleagues, or sharing our lives with 916 another. Moreover, we must evaluate and respond constantly to the ways in which the sexuality 917 of others is expressed. We must respond to sexual stimuli in the environment, including the

921 A healthy sense of sexuality is related to having a healthy body image. This church teaches that 922 caring for the body and following practices that lead to physical and emotional wellness are part
923 of the stewardship of created goodness.⁴¹ It recognizes that a positive sense of one's own body

928 their bodily integrity, and their wishes concerning welcome and unwelcome touch.

930 Sometimes, it can be very hard to develop and maintain positive attitudes about one's body. Too 931 many people struggle for a healthy sense of body as a result of experiences of degradation or 932 shaming by others, including family members and intimate partners. This church will support all

936 exclude many, including the aged and people with disabilities, and which distort the 937 understanding of what it means to be healthy. The young whose bodies are changing and growing 938 may be especially vulnerable to idealized and commercialized images of a "perfect body" that 939 play on insecurities and destructive self-loathing.

941 A holistic understanding of the interrelationship of body, mind, and spirit challenges such narrow

⁴¹ Caring for Health: Our Shared Endeavor (Chicago: ELCA, 2003).

943 celebrate human variety and particularity. This church is committed to affirming throughout life
944 the value, beauty, and health of the human body and human sexuality. It is mindful that physical,
945 emotional, relational, and spiritual wellness contribute to a lower incidence of at-risk behaviors
946 for all people, including youth.⁴²

948 Gender and friendships

949 This church also calls attention to the immense value of friendship for people in all stages of life.
950 Human life in relationship includes many different forms of rewarding human companionship.
951 Friendships express our longing for human connection, touch, and growth. They allow space for 952 self-revelation in the shelter of various degrees of mutual commitment and regard. The ELCA
953 encourages and celebrates all situations and initiatives that engage people in relationships of 954 friendship and trust, both inside and outside the church community. It also recognizes the

957 Many of our understandings of our own sexuality and sexual relationships may be formed or 958 nurtured through conversations and confiding in friends. Friendships may help us develop a sense
959 of our own beauty and the integrity of our bodies. As with parents or family members, we may 960 learn from friends a sense of caring and safe touch in trusting relationships. Friendship, like 961 family life, is a trust that can be betrayed, abused, and violated. It also must be recognized that 962 dysfunctional friendships may be detrimental to health, development, and well-being.

964 This church calls people to be good, trustworthy friends who support one another in mature self-965 understanding and healthy companionship. Friends together have the shared power and 966 responsibility to contradict demeaning and demoralizing messages from the media about 967 sexuality and to overcome the effects of physical and emotional abuse. Friends also have the

970 Community and workplace relationships are spheres of human life in which friendships and 971 companionship can and do thrive. They are also places where trust and distrust mix in 972 complicated ways.

974 Sometimes friendships become sexual in the narrower sense of giving rise to overtly erotic
975 impulses and stimulation. Erotic interest between adults open to a romantic relationship can be a 976 desired part of the growth of trust and intimacy. Erotic interest can also create conflicts and 977 danger. These have to be faced honestly when one or both of the people involved already have 978 made promises of fidelity to another. The conflicts and dangers have to be recognized, also,
979 whenever one of the involved individuals does not welcome a deeper and more complicated

982 Reintroducing distance into such friendships or breaking them off may entail an acceptance of 983 loss that requires courage and maturity. The violation of trusting relationships for sexual purposes
984 is offensive, unacceptable, and, when criminal, should be punished accordingly. A particularly 985 egregious violation of friendship is acquaintance rape.

986 Commitment and sexuality

987 Human beings remain sexual creatures for life. As a result, they must cultivate and manage 988 relationships along a spectrum that runs from casual associations to intense intimacy. The 989 deepening of trust and commitment is a lengthy process that requires deliberate attention and 990 effort. Recognizing this provides a way of thinking about how people come to select life partners

993 Couples, whether teenage, young adult, mature, or senior, move from a first acquaintance into a 994 journey of increasing knowledge, appreciation, and trust in each other. This journey involves 995 spiritual, emotional, intellectual, and physical dimensions of self-understanding. When these 996 dimensions develop at similar rates, trust and entrusting are established and secured. When they

999 As trust and entrusting are established in a relationship, physical expression naturally becomes 1000 more intimate. That is, sexual intimacy would be expected to follow the same pattern of growth 1001 marked by the other dimensions of mutual self-understanding.

1003 For this reason, this church teaches that degrees of physical intimacy should be carefully matched 1004 to degrees of growing affection and commitment. This also suggests a way to understand why this 1005 church has taught that the greatest sexual intimacies, such as coitus, should be matched with and 1006 sheltered both by the highest level of binding commitment and by social and legal protection, 1007 such as found in marriage. Here, promises of fidelity and public accountability provide the 1008 foundational basis and support for trust, intimacy, and safety, especially for the most vulnerable.

1010 This is why this church opposes non-monogamous, promiscuous, or casual sexual relationships of 1011 any kind. Indulging immediate desires for satisfaction, sexual or otherwise, is to “gratify the 1012 desires of the flesh” (Galatians 5:16–19). Such transient encounters do not allow for trust in the

1015 Such relationships undermine the dignity and integrity of individuals because physical intimacy is 1016 not accompanied by the growth of mutual self-knowledge. Absent the presence of physical,
1017 emotional, intellectual, and spiritual trust and commitment, such sexual relationships may easily
1018 damage the self and an individual’s future capacity to live out committed and trustworthy
1019 relationships. Fleeting relationships misuse the gift of sexual intimacy and are much more likely

1022 Although this church strongly discourages such relationships, it nevertheless insists that every 1023 sexual relationship entails responsibility. All sexually active people have the responsibility to 1024 protect their sexual partner from both emotional and physical harm as well as to protect 1025 themselves and their partners from sexually transmitted diseases and the possibility of an

1028 Sexual intimacy and adult cohabitation

1029 Many contemporary pressures encourage adult cohabitation. When marriage is delayed for years
1030 beyond the age of physical sexual maturity, the emotional and physical pressures for intimacy

1032 and even the desire for expensive weddings may further encourage that delay.

1034 While some of these trends are the result of individual choices, they also may be influenced by 1035 broader social forces: the increasing number of failed marriages, social acceptance of casual sex, 1036 and the strong cultural influence of individualism that largely ignores social responsibility and 1037 accountability. All are examples of why many may question the need for—and sometimes even

1040 In addition, certain laws and economic realities in this society may create extreme economic 1041 hardship for some, including older adults, who desire to be legally married. This church calls for 1042 altering laws and the factors that create a significant impediment for such people to be married.

1044 Because this church urges couples to seek the highest social and legal support for their 1045 relationships, it does not favor cohabitation arrangements outside of marriage. It has a special 1046 concern when such arrangements are entered into as an end in themselves. It does, however,
1047 acknowledge the social forces at work that encourage such practices. This church also recognizes

1050 In cases where a decision is made for cohabitation, and regardless of the reasons, this church
1051 expects its pastors and members to be clear with the couple regarding the reasons for the position 1052 of this church as well as supporting the couple in recognizing their obligation to be open and 1053 candid with each other about their plans, expectations, and levels of mutual commitment.

1055 It should be noted that some cohabitation arrangements can be constructed in ways that are 1056 neither casual nor intrinsically unstable. In earlier generations, betrothal carried obligations
1057 similar to those of marriage. In certain situations, conventional or even legal obligations
1058 accompany cohabitation arrangements. In some states, for instance, laws govern “common law 1059 marriages.” Such arrangements may differ markedly from more transitory forms of cohabitation.

1062 long-term companionship, and profound security, especially given the human propensity to sin, 1063 are best served through binding commitment, legal protections, and the public accountability of 1064 marriage, especially where the couple is surrounded by the prayers of the congregational
1065 community and the promises of God.

1068 VI Sexuality and social responsibility

1069

1070 Sexuality and society

1071 Neither individuals nor families can succeed alone; they need healthy and supportive
1072 communities.⁴³ Individuals are deeply social and therefore profoundly shaped by these

⁴³ Statistically, the healthier family and community institutions are, the higher the number of developmental assets found among its members, especially youth. Strong community institutions have a significant impact on lowering the incidence of at-risk behaviors among young people, including intimate

1073 communities, even in their most private and intimate moments. Given this reality, we must 1074 appreciate the significant influence, both positive and negative, of social forces and social 1075 contexts on human sexual behavior.

1077 This church must be prepared to speak out where such forces cause harm. In particular it will 1078 oppose all forms of sexual exploitation within and outside this church. Justice for women in

1081 This church also will attend to the need for equal protection, equal opportunities, and equal 1082 responsibilities under the law, and just treatment for those with varied sexual orientation and 1083 gender identity. Such individuals are disproportionately and negatively affected by patterns of 1084 stigma, discrimination, and abuse. Likewise it will attend to the particular needs of children and 1085 the families of those with actual or perceived differences in sexual orientation or gender identity
1087 sexual abuse.

1089 This church notes with grave concern the public commodification⁴⁴ of the human body as an 1090 economic asset. The sexual body is never to be used as an object for commercial purposes, and 1091 this church will speak against the public idolatry of pleasure, freedom, and wealth that undergirds 1092 such practices.

1094 Especially deplorable is the billion dollar global sex market and the economic systems that thrive
1095 on it, both in the United States and abroad.⁴⁵ The people trapped in this system are damaged and 1096 often destroyed by degradation, abuse, and, sometimes, torture. Companies that profit from this 1097 enterprise need to be identified and strongly denounced. This church supports building
1098 international agreements and national laws to prevent these practices.

1100 The possibility of profit is not a sufficient moral basis to use human sexuality for purposes that 1101 harm individuals or undermine social trust.⁴⁶ The ELCA opposes the sale and purchase of 1102 pornography. It also objects to commercial and technological efforts to sell sex, including mass 1103 media and commercial marketing, since these negatively impact individuals and society in 1104 significant ways.

1106 Christian responsibility includes naming economic forces and monitoring the ways in which they 1107 constrain or support healthy individual choices and social structures. This church will advocate
1108 against all that systematically undermines efforts to raise healthy children and to build solid
1109 marriages and trusting relationships, including the portrayal of responsible sexuality as abnormal

1111 This church will respond in situations where business and corporate enterprises seek profit
1112 through disrespectful treatment of the human body. This church will work with public and private 1113 institutions⁴⁷ to create structures, policies, and practices of accountability to support social norms
1114 of protection. These include codes of practice that protect society, especially children and the 1115 most vulnerable, from the misuse and abuse of sexuality for profit.

1116 This church will work with all people to craft fair and comprehensive laws particularly aimed at 1117 protecting the weakest and most vulnerable among us, especially children, from sexual harm.

1118
1119 This church supports the development and use of medical products, birth control, and initiatives
1120 that support fulfilling and responsible sexuality. This church also recognizes the important role 1121 that the availability of birth control has played in allowing women and men to make responsible 1122 decisions about the bearing and rearing of children.

1124 This church, in its concern for the neighbor, has a responsibility to be concerned about public
1125 health issues. All people who have contracted a sexually transmitted disease have an absolute 1126 responsibility to inform their sexual partners and all who are at risk.

1127
1128 Care must be taken in sex education materials and processes to inform about the dangers of 1129 diseases without teaching that sexual expression is intrinsically dirty and dangerous. Efforts at 1130 public education and protection from disease should be supported. This includes efforts that 1131 challenge stigma and discrimination, especially against those living with and affected by HIV and 1132 AIDS. This church, including its institutions and agencies, should be an active partner in 1133 discussions about how to address and contain epidemics of such diseases.

1135 This church supports social policies and practices that encourage the growth of healthy
1136 relationships and will question publicly those that erode social trust or undermine the structures 1137 within which trust is learned and preserved. The traditional concerns of this church for social 1138 justice and the protection of the vulnerable also will guide its teachings and practices in relation 1139 to social trust and sexuality.

1141 Sexuality and public ministry

1142 This church does not tolerate the abuse of the ministerial office for personal sexual gratification.
1143 This church holds high expectations for those individuals called to serve as rostered leaders.
1144 Pastors, associates in ministry, deaconesses, and diaconal ministers who abuse the trust placed in 1145 them by engaging in promiscuity, infidelity, adultery, or forms of sexual abuse violate those high 1146 standards. Such violations severely damage the credibility of the public ministry to which this 1147 church and its leaders are called.

1148
1149 Sexuality in the workplace

1150 In all workplaces, supervisors, coworkers, professionals, and clients must negotiate complex 1151 relationships. The sexual dimension of these relationships, both in the general sense and in the 1152 sometimes more specifically erotic sense, needs to be honestly recognized.

⁴⁷ This includes many varieties of social, economic, and business institutions.

1153 Employers and supervisors, including within this church, must pay particular attention to work 1154 relationships between colleagues, especially where there are power differentials, and where the 1155 workplace environment is rendered sexually offensive or hostile by the conduct of coworkers.
1156

1158 best practices, and legal protections. This church remains committed to its own efforts to help 1159 make congregations, synods and the churchwide organization safe and healthy places to live and 1160 work. The ELCA will not tolerate sexual harassment within the workplace.
1161

1162 VII Conclusion

1163 Human sexuality and moral discernment

1164 This social statement grows out of the foundational theological understanding that Lutherans read
1165 and understand the Bible in light of the death and resurrection of Jesus Christ. The “good news”
1166 of the Gospel that we are freed from bondage to sin (justification before God) allows us to 1167 respond to the Triune God’s mercy through love for and service to the neighbor (vocation in the 1168 world). The social statement further affirms that because God’s promises are trustworthy, each of 1169 us is called in Christian freedom to be trustworthy in our relationships with one another and to 1170 build social institutions and practices that create trust.

1173 Because of the love of the Triune God, Father, Son and Holy Spirit, we are a people set free for 1174 lives of responsibility committed to seeking the good of all. This statement responds to this 1175 church’s call for a foundational framework⁴⁸ that will help it discern what it means faithfully to 1176 follow God’s law of love in the increasingly complex sphere of human sexuality. It does not offer
1177 once-and-for-all answers to contemporary questions. Rather, it seeks to tap the deep roots of 1178 Scripture and the Lutheran theological tradition for specific Christian convictions, themes, and 1179 wisdom that will assist people of faith to discern what is responsible and faithful action in the 1180 midst of the complexity of daily life.
1181

1182 It proposes guideposts to direct this church’s discernment as it tries to be faithful. It provides 1183 markers by which individual and communal decisions can be tested under the guidance of the 1184 Holy Spirit. It seeks to describe the social realities of this age and to address them pastorally. In 1185 so far as it is possible, it also seeks to speak in ways that can address both religious and secular
1186 discussions of these matters.

1188 The necessity of mercy, always

1189 Human lives are littered with broken promises and betrayed trust. Not everyone knows how to 1190 trust and not everyone is trustworthy. Relationships end because trust has been broken. Given 1191 finitude and sin, many things happen in even the strongest relationships that threaten trust.
1192 Forgiveness and reconciliation, then, join with mutuality and justice to support trust and 1193 trustworthiness in relationships.

1195 Seeking the Spirit's guidance, we discern direction for living faithfully in terms of human 1196 sexuality. We do this not in some abstract ideal realm, but amid all the complexities, conflicts,
1197 sorrows, discoveries, and joys of actual social and individual life. It is a task that this church
1198 accepts as a redeemed community. As simultaneously captive to sin and yet liberated and 1199 forgiven people of faith, we walk together both humbly and boldly toward God's promised future.

1200 Implementing Resolutions

1202 Resolved:

1203

1204 1. To embrace as a church our legacy of a rich theological tradition that proclaims
1205 God's gracious love expressed in Jesus Christ as the basis of our salvation, hope, 1206 and unity, and to call upon members of this church on this basis to commit 1207 themselves to finding ways to live together faithfully in the midst of 1208 disagreements;

1210 2. To call upon this church to affirm the various studies created for the Journey
1211 Together Faithfully series as resources for ongoing deliberation and discernment,
1212 and to direct the program unit for Church in Society to maintain their availability 1213 as long as demand continues;

1215 3. To request the Office of the Presiding Bishop to identify and publicize available 1216 liturgical resources for use by rostered leaders, individuals, and families at the

1218

1219 4. To encourage Augsburg Fortress, Publishers to consider developing education 1220 curricula with particular attention to the needs of children, middle school students, 1221 high school youth, and their parents for understanding Christian values and 1222 making responsible choices;

1224 5. To recognize that organizations like Women of the ELCA, Lutheran Men in 1225 Mission, Lutheran Youth Organization, and campus ministries foster and support 1226 friendships; to encourage them to lift up and celebrate the value of strong 1227 friendships and to support the formation of voluntary associations for nurturing 1228 them;

1230 6. To call upon all congregations, pastors, and other rostered leaders to reach out in 1231 welcome to all in accord with previous Churchwide Assembly actions as 1232 reaffirmed by the 2005 Churchwide Assembly (CA05.05.18), and to assist 1233 members to understand what it means to be hospitable to all in the name of Christ
1234 regardless of sexual orientation or gender identity;

1236 7. To call upon the ELCA to amend the eligibility provisions of the ELCA Pension
1237 and Other Benefits Program, consistent with the policies of this church;

1238

1239 8. To call upon this church to encourage the availability and funding of 1240 comprehensive sex education programs in public schools, as well as in Lutheran 1241 private schools;

1242

- 1243 9. To affirm the 2001 ELCA Message, *Commercial Sexual Exploitation*⁴⁹ and its 1244 continuing value for the mission and ministry of the ELCA;
1245
- 1246 10. To call upon this church's advocacy and corporate social responsibility ministries 1247 to support and advocate measures consistent with this social statement; 1248
- 1249 11. To express appreciation for the work being done by the churchwide organization, 1250 synods, institutions, and congregations to prevent sexual harassment and 1251 misconduct; to encourage strengthening these efforts by all expressions and 1252 ministries of this church, and to ensure the availability of effective resources for 1253 dealing with sexual misconduct and sexual harassment within this church.
1254
- 1255 12. To call upon teaching theologians, bishops, pastors, diaconal ministers, associates 1256 in ministry, deaconesses, educators, and others to continue to extend theological 1257 and biblical reflection as well as theoretical and practical understanding of human 1258 sexuality through intellectual discourse, moral deliberation, continued research, 1259 discussion, and writing;
1260
- 1261 13. To recognize that the ELCA [has adopted]⁵⁰ a strategy that will guide its response
1262 to the HIV and AIDS epidemic, and to call upon all units and expressions of this 1263 church to support that strategy;
1264
- 1265 14. To call upon all congregations, synods, early childhood education centers, 1266 elementary and secondary schools, colleges and universities, seminaries, campus
1267 ministries, outdoor ministries, social ministry organizations, public policy
1268 advocacy ministries, and all churchwide units to carry out the substance and spirit 1269 of this statement; and 1270
- 1271 15. To call upon Church in Society and other appropriate churchwide units to oversee 1272 a process of implementation and accountability for this social statement and to 1273 report on implementation to the Church Council in early 2012.

⁴⁹ The ELCA message on "Commercial Sexual Exploitation" (Chicago: ELCA, 2001).

⁵⁰ The ELCA Church Council will consider the adoption of this strategy at its March 2009 meeting.
